American Women and Higher Education: Understanding the Impact of Postwar Developments

Friday, September 12th

12:00 p.m. to 1:30 p.m.

College of Education Room 22

Refreshments will be served.

Following World War II, the influx of war veterans accompanied a move toward research in American higher education. In that same era, society seemed to encourage women to leave the job market and the college campus to focus on building families. Using research for her book, Higher Education for Women in Postwar America, 1945-1965 (Johns Hopkins, 2006), Linda Eisenmann will explore how these changes affected women as students and faculty, including implications that remain with us today.

Mark your calendars for these upcoming HEC Speakers.
